VOL. ONE

(of something)

HUNGER

+ JOY

Materials Needed:

- Stuff to cut up
- Scissors, glue sticks, markers
- 1-2 half-page piece of paper per person

Part 1 | Reflection (5 minutes):

- Think about your:
 - cooking/baking process
 - a digital process that you find teachable
 - (or both)

familiar, provocative, or appreciation for the slowness of letting the thing unfold.

⇒ things for, not just materials + how you do things
⇒ letting process get familiar, exploration being new insight

(germs connections)

- cooking + DH starts in similar, preparing ways, but can lead to so much.

final product (use, view, process/ experience) dictating where we start

- to feed myself or to feed others

Collins: mis in place vs. prep for text analysis.

Jumper: "about is making"

- verbs + adjectives
- exploring as knowledge-making
- balancing structure + exploring

Part 2 | Making (30 minutes)

- You can use cut up materials from the magazines and clipart provided, you can draw and write, and you can of course change your process or the focus of your page as you make and reflect and let your creation come to life!

MAKE SOMETHING

INGREDIENTS

not just a list
not just measurements and steps
here is what you do here is your process
here is your tools
here are your alternatives here are the pitfalls here are the things you may not expect here are the places you might refine

STEPS

1. Plan. If you are the kind of person who does better in freefall, go directly to step 2.
2. Sketch out. The roughest draft imaginable. Kill your inner perfectionist; they aren't going to help.
3. Let sit. Forget what you did, the way your hands shaped the details. Do something else. Live.
4. Revise. Resurrect your perfectionism, but allow them only to ~~advise~~ advise, never to dictate.
5. Let sit. Revise again. Repeat.
6. When you have reached an accord with your perfectionist, it's done.
7. Share it. Let it go.
8. Rest. Then make something else.

WHAT IS MAKING?

2. An escape or journey into the unknown or a thoughtful process?
